

The following table sorts real estate ads for 2003 December with the last 200 title transfers in Belmont-Cragin in 2001 and 2002 and provides asking prices in surrounding census areas for comparison. Title transfers were accessed through a link at the Chicago Tribune real estate website to a Cook County online database of title transfers. The Cook County site provided only the last 200 transfers for a query year and neighborhood. The rate of title transfers for Belmont-Cragin increased 2000-2002, so that 200 transfers occurred in fewer days in successive years. I didn't get around to going back to the database to try for all the returns for each year.

The preponderance of title transfers were from Hispanic surname to Hispanic surname, a few transfers were from Polish and non-Polish white or black, consistent with the racial makeup of the area. Hispanic surnames don't indicate the national origin of a person. Sales of Hispanic to Hispanic I know of 4800 west on Deming and Wrightwood tended to be Puerto Rican to Mexican; and the Mexican paid an inflated price to the Puerto Rican compared to what the Puerto Rican paid a prior owner, usually white. Before the Belmont Cragin Times discontinued distribution and/or publication, it included an interview with a typical Puerto Rican buyer in the mid- to late-1980s. Puerto Ricans bought properties for speculation, and lived in them only long enough to make a profit. They had mortgages, and couldn't make a profit without considerable inflation. The transient relationship of many Puerto Ricans to the area, including Puerto Ricans on government payrolls, created a baffling decline in respect for the community at the same time the asking prices, selling prices, and mortgage loans inflated.

Tribune Sales section did not differentiate between single family homes, two flats, condos, apartment buildings, and business property on business streets

None of the many geopolitical units in the area is congruent with another.

Ward boundaries, neighborhoods, census areas, school attendance areas, zipcodes, library areas, police districts, and legislative districts all overlap. The failure to merge all services into one specific community defeats democracy. It discourages in depth knowledge of political candidates, awareness of and feeling for the community. It encourages solely mercenary relationships between people and residential property.

The Census Bureau considered using a combined race and Hispanic origin question in the 1990 Census. On October 30, 1997 the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) issued "Standards for Maintaining, Collecting, and Presenting Federal Data on Race and Ethnicity." All federal agencies, including the Census Bureau, who collect and report data on race and ethnicity must follow these standards. Race and ethnicity are considered to be two separate and distinct concepts in this standard, and OMB accepted the Interagency Committee for the Review of the Racial and Ethnic Standards recommendation that two separate questions -- one for race and one for ethnicity or Hispanic origin -- be used whenever feasible to provide flexibility and ensure data quality.

In Census 2000, like in the 1990 census, the Hispanic origin question has a write-in line which is used to obtain write-in responses of Hispanic subgroups other than the major groups of Mexican, Cuban, and Puerto Ricans. Persons with other Hispanic origins such as Salvadoran, Nicaraguan, Argentinean, and so on, will be able to write in their specific origin group. In fact, the Census Bureau's code list contains over 30 Hispanic or Latino subgroups. For Census 2000 maximum detail on Hispanic subgroups will be made available in micro data files while data products containing tabulations will report less detail information.

Deciding which subjects to include is an interactive process involving the Census Bureau, the Office of Management and Budget, and the U.S. Congress. To balance concerns about the intrusiveness of the decennial census, the many requirements placed on federal agencies, and the needs of state, local, and tribal governments to manage programs, only those subjects that had specific federal legislative justification were recommended for Census 2000.

For Census 2000, the Census Bureau has proposed subjects on the short form only when data are both needed in response to legislative requirements and required at the block level - the smallest level of geography for which we report information. Therefore, we moved five subjects that were asked of every housing unit in 1990 to the long form, which will go out to a sample of housing units in 2000. These subjects include marital status, units in structure, number of rooms, value of home, and monthly rent.

Only one new subject was added to the Census 2000 questionnaire: grandparents as caregivers. This addition complies with legislation passed by the 104th Congress requiring that the decennial census obtain information about grandparents who have primary responsibility for care of grandchildren (Title 13, United States Code, Chapter 5, Section 141).
